MESSAGE FROM NANCY PEARLMAN, Executive Director of Educational Communications

FORT WORTH/ DALLAS, TEXAS

A few months ago I enjoyed the hospitality of Texans as I visited many cultural and natural historic places. The Fort Worth/Dallas area of Texas is certainly worth a visit to enjoy the beauty of the region.

From the Fort Worth Convention and Visitors Bureau, www.FortWorth.com, 111 W. 4th St., Suite 200, Fort Worth, TX 76102, (800) 433-5747, is a short three and a half minute fast-paced video, Fort Worth, City of Cowboys and Culture of shots with music (no narration) showing the spectacular collection of museums, rich Western heritage, including the stockyards and cattle drive, downtown entertainment (dancing, eating, and concerts), family attractions (zoo, amusement parks, etc.) and other activities. In Fort Worth, attractions include the Kimbell Art Museum, Sundance Square, and Fire Station No. 1 (presenting 150 years of city history from a cattle town to its dynamic business center). The Fort Worth Stockyards are a must see with their longhorn drive along Exchange Avenue, the historic buildings, museum, and tours plus restaurants, shopping, and nighttime dancing. The Fort Worth Museum of Science and History, 1600 Gendy St., Fort Worth, TX 76107, (817) 255-9300, offers fascinating exhibits in its 166,000 square-foot facility and also its IMAX Dome Omni Theater. The film "Tornado Alley" follows storm chasers on an ambitious effort to understand the origins and evolution of tornadoes and they take you into the heart of a tornado. An innovative new energy exhibition tells the dynamic story of energy resources in North Texas; "Energy Blast" brings physics, technology, and innovative thinking to life as guests are asked to explore geophysical formations, calculate drilling depths and directions, and to experiment with new resources. Many other of their presentations are multimedia, interactive, and informative dioramas. There is also the Fort Worth Children's Museum; the Cattle Raisers Museum; and the Innovation Studios/Innovation Gallery along with the 60-year old Museum School. The state dinosaur of Texas, Paluxysaurus jonesi is featured in DinoLabs/DinoDig. There are some great pictures and costumes in the National Cowgirl Museum and Hall of Fame, a Native American Indian Collection, and astronomy programs and laser shows in the Noble Planetarium.

The Botanic Research Institute of Texas, www.brit.org, at 1800 University Drive, is not just a scientific center for conservation (one of the largest herbariums in the world also with rare books) but provides visitors with a sample of flowering plants of the Fort Worth Prairie on its "living" roofs.

FESTIVALS, FESTIVALS

by Preston Ashbourne

Festivals are fun occasions that celebrate a group's commonality of interest or an event. While "feasts" are festivals with usually a religious bent, festivals usually aren't (but can be). Festivals provide entertainment and also teach traditions to upcoming generations as well as exposing outsiders to the ingroup's culture. There are many kinds of festivals: Comedy Festivals, Ethnic Festivals, Folk Festivals, Peanut Festivals, Oyster Festivals, Wine Festivals and on and on and on!

Of course we are all interested in the Folk and Ethnic categories, where the fun consists of Shopping, Food, Music, Food, Dancing, Food and did I mention Food? The ethnic festivals I've attended (Greek, Ukrainian, Hungarian, Polynesian, etc.) all have wonderful cuisine from their respective areas!

Where to find these Festivals? Well, of course the internet, but old fashioned telephone books will give phone numbers to ethnic churches. It usually is a church that puts on these events. Online look up <your city here> Greek Festivals; in the Los Angeles area Alpine Village hosts several ethnic festivals in addition to Oktoberfest. see alpinevillagecenter.com Do a little legwork to find one you are interested in, and you will have a great time at whatever festival you attend!

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE OUD

by John Bilezikjian

Al-Farabi, born Abu Nasr Muhammad al-Farabi (c. 870-950), a Persian philosopher, stated that the origin of the Oud was invented by Lamak, the sixth grandson of Adam. The legend states that the grieving Lamak hung the body of his dead son on a tree. The bleached shaped skeleton of his son's body on the tree inspired the first Oud. Such is the origin of this ancient musical instrument. The Oud is the predecessor of many present day stringed instruments. It is the Father of the Lute and the Grandfather of the Guitar. The Oud is an ancient musical stringed instrument dating back some 2500+ years to Persia having in its present form 11 strings, no frets and it is played with an eagle's quill.

The Oud is the Queen of musical instruments in the Middle-East. It is to the East what the Guitar is to the West.

The Oud is played in Armenia, Turkey, Greece, Libya, Egypt, Lebanon, Kuwait, Saudi-Arabia, Morocco, Algeria, Bahrain, The Arab Gulf area, Israel, Persia and America to name a few countries. It migrated into Europe and is played in France and Spain as well.

Each country has their own great players and to each country the Oud has a unique style of it's own.

By the 9th Century a freed African slave became whom I feel to be the most important and prominent Oud player of his time. His name was Ziryab, Abu I-Hasan (Ali Ibn Nafi) in Persian and Arabic. He was born in 789 and died in 857. His birthplace was Baghdad, Iraq. He was active at the Umayyad court of Cordoba in Islamic Iberia. He first achieved notoriety at the Abbasid court in Baghdad and was the student of the great musician and composer, Ishaq al-Mawsili.

Ziryab is credited with inventing the use of the eagle's feather as the desired plectrum for the Oud instead of the plectrum that was used up to his time which was a piece of wood. The wood chip plectrum would break the strings and the eagle's feather quill that he introduced allowed the strings to last longer and not break.

He also added a 5th course of strings to the then 4 course set of strings that was on the instrument. He dyed the 5 course set of strings, colors to symbolize the Aristotelian humors and the 5th course set to represent the soul.

Those colors, Persian/Arabic name and the Humors were:

String 1-Yellow	Zir	Bile
String 2-Red	Mathna	Blood
String 3-Red	Hadd	Soul
String 4-White	Mathlath	Phlegm
String 5-Black	Bamm	Melancholy

He wrote songs, he created a unique and influential style of musical performance for generations to come. He had a great influence on Spanish music and is considered the founder of the Andalusian music traditions of North Africa and the Middle-East.

He founded one of the first schools of music in Cordoba. He was considered a virtuoso on the Oud and a great singer of songs. He introduced the Oud to the Spanish Guitar which eventually became present day Flamenco music.

Ziryab had 8 sons and two daughters and all of his children became musicians of some prominence. The children kept the memory of Ziryab alive and through his children they spread his music throughout Europe.

Some of the most important and prominent Oud makers were:

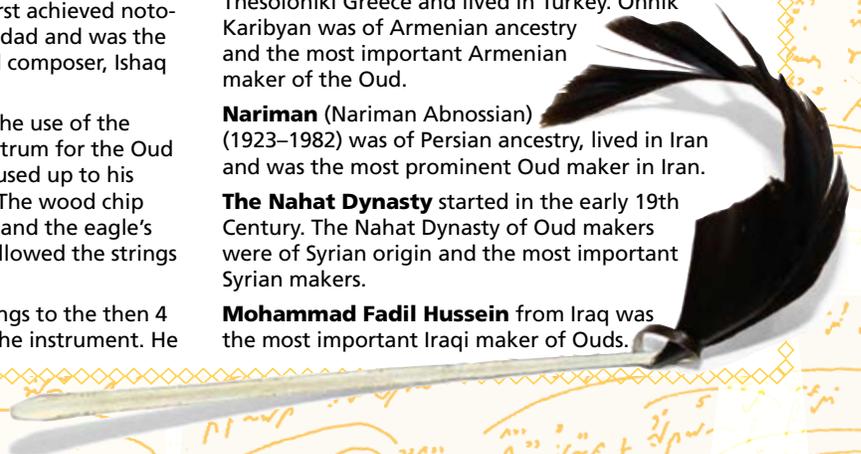

Manolis Venios (Emmanuel Manol) (1845-1915) who lived in Turkey and was of Greek ancestry. I believe that he was the most important Oud maker of his time.

Onnik Karibyan who died in 1976 was born in Thesoloniki Greece and lived in Turkey. Onnik Karibyan was of Armenian ancestry and the most important Armenian maker of the Oud.

Nariman (Nariman Abnossian) (1923-1982) was of Persian ancestry, lived in Iran and was the most prominent Oud maker in Iran.

The Nahat Dynasty started in the early 19th Century. The Nahat Dynasty of Oud makers were of Syrian origin and the most important Syrian makers.

Mohammad Fadil Hussein from Iraq was the most important Iraqi maker of Ouds.

stories from the world of music

You read about the Oud in the article by John Bilezikjian on the previous page. Now read about John himself in this article by Carolyn Harper. Carolyn has been active for more than 40 years in the performing arts of the Middle East. Her association with John stems from membership in a national Middle Eastern arts association. She has been a friend of the Bilezikjian family for more than 35 years.

FROM CABARET TO CONCERT HALL – FIFTY YEARS OF MAKING MUSIC

From the day he found his grandfather's instrument to today, John Bilezikjian has devoted his life to music. He took an ancient folk instrument, the oud, and expanded its range into areas never before explored.

In this country, most people are only aware of the oud as the strange looking instrument that often backs up a belly dancer. Bilezikjian's talent expanded far beyond smoky cabarets onto concert stages worldwide making him the most distinguished oudist of his generation. His hard work has earned him the title of "America's Oud Virtuoso".

The oud is an ancient eleven-stringed, fretless Persian instrument dating back more than 2000 years. It is played with an eagle's feather. It is the precursor of the lute, guitar and other western stringed instruments, having been brought back to Europe by returning crusaders.

Bilezikjian has given command performances for heads of state, appeared on concert tours with Leonard Cohen, performed with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Pacific Symphony, the Pasadena Pops Orchestra, and the Los Angeles

Mandolin orchestra, among others. In June 2005, he debuted with the Boston Pops Orchestra as featured soloist, marking the first time the oud was presented in a solo capacity in a classical concert setting.

Although they weren't aware of it, movie lovers have heard his music for many years. Bilezikjian has recorded sound tracks for more than fifty films, including "Prince of Egypt", "Spy Game", "Siriana", "Must Love Dogs", and "Beowulf". His music can be heard on many PBS documentaries. His first job for the film industry was for the sound track of the "Mission Impossible" series on television when was 19 years old.

Bilezikjian's record company, Dantz Records, located in Laguna Hills, has produced more than 25 recordings encompassing folk, pop and classical genres. They are available through his website www.DantzRecords.com.

On August 21, 2011 John Bilezikjian appeared in concert at the La Mirada Performing Arts Center. In celebration of the fifty years he has dedicated to a career in music, the concert included musical friends with whom he has performed over the years, including members of his first band "The Halehs" formed when he was 11 years old.

For information on an upcoming concert or any of John's recordings, please visit www.DantzRecords.com or call 855-LOUD-DIST.

Earth...

It has been a long time since I have tasted a real tomato.....The kind that has a beautiful reddish color and a smell that taste so delicious...you can slice it and have it with mozzarella cheese some fresh mint, olive oil and a little salt and paper...or in "Shirazi Salad" (chopped tomato, onion and cucumber).

So, my mission was to find a tomato that has a real taste, not so plastic...I started to go to every market, from our little neighborhood ones to the big markets, cheap and expensive or even to the Farmers market...Well, it became like a mission impossible!!... but there is a saying in Iran : the seeker is finder !!

One night at family gathering, the subject of our conversation led to the organic food and vegetables...I started with my complain about tomatoes

My cousin heard me from the other side of the room and said, if you are so eager, why don't you go to our little farm and plant it yourself.

The idea of my own vegetable garden was spinning in my head...I became interested right there. With a big smile on my face, I committed myself to it...totally ignorant about the hard work ahead...The farm has been sitting there for almost a year without being taken care of but for the love of tomatoes, I'll do anything ! ... So I set a day and I got the keys ...

Here comes Monday morning and how comfortable I was in my bed. I started to visualize the farm and got up right away to get ready. Fortunately in this process my 19 year old niece, Lili, who is an artist and is here for her summer break from Vancouver, showed interest to go with me...

We were given tools and big bags to take out all the weeds that have been growing for the last 12 months...

Here we are, and we found ourselves totally clueless...

Without having gloves to pick the weeds and hat to protect us from the sun, we started to work ! ... picked up the tools and did not know how to work with them. "Oh Well," we chimed. We looked at each other "how do we start, where do we begin?" Well, we decided it's better to start from the middle so we can see some progress at the end of the day. So we did. We started to pick up all the weeds by hand and bagged them.

Meanwhile, there were other people working in their own farms and I guess they could tell that we were such beginners ... So we got some visitors. They came to help and gave us great tips ... We found ourselves in a little nice Organic Community that everyone helps each other. Looking at all their successful farms motivated us. Especially when Senor Alberto brought us some fresh onions from his farm, Lili and I started to work harder.

Little did I know that I had to teach my dance class that night, playing my castanets and rolling my fingers on it was the most painful movement ... forget the sunburn on face and keep my back straight ... but the show must go on :-) Not to mention Lili being an incredible artist, she also work with her hands.....so, OUCH.

Lilli and I kept going back to the farm almost every other day and worked on it to prepare for the tilling.

After a few weeks, my partner and more family members volunteered to go with us and help to prepare the soil.

Today, I noticed how much we have done. The soil is ready to plant seeds ... It is an incredible feeling ... Ole'

EARTH—How beautiful is to be in touch with it ... How peaceful it was while we were digging the weeds out ... There were some dogs barking some birds and roosters singing Y Nada Mas only the silence of nature ... Lilli and I, from time to time, were talking and coming up with an ideas of how to live life simply and enjoy it ... There were moments that I found myself singing some folk songs I remembered from Mazandaran (area by Caspian sea in Iran) and Lilli was whistling her own songs ...

I stopped and looked at us, we were in most colorful clothing in this beautiful farm singing and whistling and digging earth to prepare it to feed us, then I thought " Aren't all the folk songs and dances created this way: in the nature by the nature and what is it that when you go to the mountains you always wear bright colored clothes"? The blend of us and earth made a great impression on me ... What a momentous experience I had.

Back to the title of "Earth Cultures Project ... Let's keep in touch with it before they turn it all into some shopping malls and high-rises ... Let's get out there end enjoy the nature.

I will post pictures from our progress and my first organic tomatoes ...

Join an international group of climate change leaders

The Mediterranean City: A Conference on Climate Change Adaptation

Water - The United Nations has identified issues related to water as a critical area in which climate change adaptation may occur.

Energy - With a natural supply of abundant solar energy and the potential for tidal and off-shore wind power, the Mediterranean climate zones have great potential to harness existing local renewable energy supplies.

Biodiversity and Open Space -

Mediterranean ecosystems are nutrient-poor, seasonally-stressed, yet species-rich ecosystems that provide unique services to urban centers while mitigating both drought and floods, cleaning polluted urban runoff and providing open space.

The Built Environment - In the face of rapid development and population growth, redefining the built environment to include parkland and open space promotes the preservation of regionally-unique habitat while also ensuring access opportunities to individuals of all income levels.

Public Health - Dependent on clean air and water, natural geophysical processes, and biological diversity - a healthy human population must respect and tend natural resources.

Governance - Cities are now the engines of the world economy and social structure and must, therefore, work as a network across national boundaries to bring more resources and knowledge to building solutions.
